Montrose deeply values its long-standing relationships with Tribal Nations. We work with Tribal governments and communities to address the critical needs of economic development, resource management, climate resilience, environmental quality, and preservation of cultural heritage with the utmost respect to Tribal Sovereignty.

Through our well-established relationships with the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs and other agencies we facilitate a range of projects. These projects include fee-to-trust land applications, gaming and other economic development projects, housing, transportation, recreation, restoration and remediation, emergency response and disaster recovery, and more. For more than 25 years our team has successfully navigated the complex regulatory environments that pertain to these project types.

Our Services

Montrose prepares comprehensive and defensible environmental compliance documents, including those required under the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), Tribal environmental regulations, state laws, and agency-specific technical requirements. With more than 10,000 NEPA and related documents completed nationwide, we anticipate challenges and deliver high-quality studies tailored to geographic, cultural, and regulatory contexts. This experience has allowed us to mitigate risks and develop agency-preferred templates, expediting document development and agency review.

Our team of funding specialists partner with Tribes to secure and leverage funding. These funds can be used to build and strengthen Tribal environmental restoration and resiliency programs, quality housing, infrastructure improvements, economic development, resource management, waste management, and preservation of cultural heritage. Once funding is secured, Montrose can be your trusted partner for grant management/administration, reporting, and regulatory compliance.

Montrose gratefully assists Tribal-designated representatives in all aspects of project development from funding to completion, highlighting community values and preserve culture. We don't just provide technical expertise—we build long-term partnerships grounded in trust, respect, and shared goals. Our approach is informed by a sound understanding of Tribal self-determination and the environmental concerns unique to each Tribal community.
